

ROADSHOW 2016

The Scottish Government's planned Named Person scheme will undermine parents' responsibility for their own children and allow state officials unprecedented powers to interfere with family life. Come and hear what you can do to say NO2NP.

STORIES

Janet McDermott

Janet McDermott homeschools her five children but has experienced constant interference from local officials. She is concerned about the state taking the role of a “cooperative parent” and believes she has already been a victim of the Named Person scheme.

James and Rhianwen McIntosh

The McIntoshes were shocked when NHS Forth Valley told them that all four of their children had Named Persons who would automatically be sent their confidential medical records, as well as details of any missed appointments.

Lesley Scott

Lesley Scott represents a charity supporting families with children suffering from ME. She says the Named Person scheme will make matters worse for these families, as there is already a constant battle between parents and the state over how the condition should be treated.

Anne Cannon

Mother of five, Anne Cannon believes the Named Person scheme will damage the relationship between parents and state officials, such as teachers. She says the scheme will put pressure on teachers to act on often “innocuous” information, putting “parents on their guard”.
